HISTORY OF INDIANOLA
Abstract of Article Written by Carl Fletcher Brown, 1964
Found in the Indianola Public Library

The first official government of the City of Indianola took office 1 April 1864, just 100 years ago this year. It had its beginnings when 90 taxpayers of Indianola in October 1863, petitioned the county court. The courts granted this petition just 60 years after the Louisiana Purchase in 1803. The one million square miles embraced in the purchase was unexplored and inhabited by Indians. Probably not over one thousand whites were in this vast territory. After the exploration of Lewis and Clark, it generally was believed the land would never be settled by civilized people, except along the principal streams.

Territorial government was set up and settlement was so rapid that states were formed. Iowa territory was admitted as a state in 1846. The Virginia form of organization by counties was followed and Warren County was created by legislative act, being named in memory of Brig. General Joseph WARREN who lost his life in the Battle of Bunker Hill. A commission was appointed to locate the county seat of government.

The settlers did not feel the need of county government with sheriff and judge. They were industrious, frugal and not inclined to meddle in each others affairs. Justice was being administered satisfactorily by a vigilante committee. But they did feel the need of taxes for schools and roads. The commissioners selected the site for the seat of government on 4 June 1849, and gave it the name "Indianola." Colonel P. P. Henderson said, several years later, the name "Indianola" was taken from a news item about Indianola, Texas, which was in a copy of the New York Sun that had been wrapped around his lunch. Eighty acres, in the form of a square, were purchased for $100 for the town site.

Warren County never was plagued by Indian conflicts for the reason that before the whites were permitted to take up settlement a treaty had been made by which the Sac and Fox Indians ceded their lands in Iowa to the United States Government.

In the horse and buggy days, the court house in Indianola was surrounded by a hitchrack for horses. Pumps for watering horses were located on each corner of the square. By the order of the city council, cows were restrained from running at large after 20 November 1887. According to the Record and Tribune history of Warren County, the Indianola Journal had this item about the coming of the Rock Island Railroad to Indianola. "Think of it! The iron horse, dragging cars of progress, at 20 miles an hour, snorting into our city, a telegraph bringing us news with a speed that outstrides the lightning's flashing level best, and a grain elevator likewise. Out of the woods at last!"

And Indianola continued to get out of the woods. It was one of the first towns in Iowa to have a municipal electric plant which was constructed in 1890. This was a steam plant which burned coal that had to be hauled. D. C. current was generated and was available only mornings and evenings until midnight. Day current began in 1911. Customers were charged according to the number of lamps used. The location of the plant was determined by the fact that the city owned the ground and not by economy.

By 1926, the cost was so high a change was necessary. Fairbanks, Morse diesel-powered generators producing A. C. current were installed. The diesels burned fuel oil which then was very cheap. The oil came to Indianola by rail and was conveyed by pipeline from the railroad to the electric plant. Financing was arranged by paying Fairbanks, Morse & Company pledge orders payable only from the earnings of the plant. The pledge orders were not a debt of the city. This was before the day of Revenue Bonds which are the modern way of such financing. The pledge orders were all paid before due while the cost of electricity to the people of Indianola dropped from 12 cents per KW to 5 cents per KW.

In 1905 the city contracted for construction of a water plant to cost $40,000 to be paid by sale of $40,000 bonds. But, the city was prohibited against selling the bonds. So the plant was not paid for and was operated privately. The water supply was South River, a bend of which then came near the present residence. A dam was built at this bend and a steam pumping plant was constructed to pump the water from the river to a stand pipe where the present water tower now stands. Later, the river cut a new channel a half mile south leaving the dam and pumping station dry. Eventually, the city bought the plant and mains for $15,000. Wells were constructed and equipped with electric pumps. But the water was hard and contained iron which stained everything in which the water stood.

With the help of electric plant money, an iron removal and softening plant was constructed in 1933 at a cost of $30,830. The 40,000 gallon, 115 foot water tower was built in 1932. The 2,525 foot deep well was drilled and equipped in 1955. Indianola was one of 12 cities taking part in cooperation with the Board of Health to test the effectiveness of fluorine in the water supply in 1952. The deep well produced fluorinated water and ended the need to add fluorine. The original mains laid in 1905 are still in service and have been extended over the years to 27 1/2 miles.

The first paving was asphalt around the square in 1903. This was removed in 1949 and replaced by concrete. The next paving was of wooden blocks, one block each way from the square and to the Rock Island depot on Howard Street, 10 1/2 blocks in all. The wooden blocks are still in use. Paving has continued at intervals until now Indianola has 30 miles of paved streets.
